

Livable Santa Fe Fellowship

The Livable Santa Fe Fellowship is a six-month program that equips community members with the knowledge and skills to help make Santa Fe more affordable, sustainable, and vibrant. Fellows commit to attend a speaker series with national and local leaders and additional training sessions that enable participants to build their expertise and strengthen Santa Fe. The program is free, and graduates receive a $500 stipend. Graduates join a powerful growing network of alumni that continues to shape Santa Fe post-fellowship.

2024

This year, applicants can apply to participate in cohorts focused on affordable housing or sustainable urban growth.

Affordable Housing Cohort:

- History of affordable housing in Santa Fe
- Local and national models of affordable housing
- The tensions and tradeoffs made when planning for the growth of Santa Fe
- How land use decisions get made and opportunities for engagement
- Key policy changes that could increase local affordable housing supply
- Ways fellows can elevate their individual and collective voices

Sustainable Urban Growth Cohort:

- Ways to build a more connected Santa Fe that embraces multi-modal transportation
- How density, connectivity, and sustainability are linked
- Decision makers and processes impacting local bikeability, walkability, and public transit
- Needed infrastructure and policy changes that would achieve greater transportation equity
- Ways fellows can elevate their individual and collective voices

Fellows commit to the following:

Applicants are welcome to complete an application for each cohort but will only be selected for participation in one. The application process is competitive, so applicants are asked to ensure they are available to attend at least ten of the twelve sessions. All sessions are held in person.
